Died, on the 17th of Sept., at Belmont, the residence of her husband, Mrs. M. E. Croxton, wife of Dr. Wm. P. Croxton, leaving an affectionate husband, doting parents, and many sincere friends, who mourn her as one whose seat is made vacant only, that her spirit may rest in a brighter clime.

A fond mother cannot sever the ties of deep-toned affection, and resignedly take final leave of two sweet little buds, scarce able to lisp her name, without the exercise of that faith which shone so resplendently around her dying bed, and bade her consign them to the care of Him, who ever watches over the seed of the faithful. Eulogy for the dead has become so trite, that the reader passes lightly by an admonitory warning of a Christian's death; but 'tis here that we would tell of one whose piety was sound, deep, and consistent; whose Christian grace of humility tempered so well her walks. In all the phases of life, she quietly entered upon its duties, as one who had covenanted well to observe "Woman's mission," that path of vicissitudes—her unavoidable lot. The writer of this had known her long and well—had seen her pass the ordeal of maidenhood, surrounded by temptations, as she moved through gay circles of festive halls, and gazed admiringly upon her quiet face, which seemed all unconscious of circumstances—had seen her a fair and blushing bride drinking in sentiments of long life and happiness, pouring on her ear from friends who hovered near—and there she stood, wearing the same placid and meek smile, so like her gentle character. But when she turned from the busy haunts of this flitting earth, and assumed the duties of a wife, 'twas there she seemed more lovely, as her world extended not beyond the confines of her own home, that domestic circle where woman's worth is most surely acknowledged, and most fully appreciated. 'Tis hard to sever the ties of friendship that bound us thus closely; but this is of earth. By lingering here, our sorrows increase, therefore we resign her to that land, where she can know naught of changes below; for

"She has dropped her cumbrous clay,
And joyful soars the shining way;
While kindred spirits spread their wings
And bear her to the King of kings."

Died, of typhoid fever, on the 8th of August, at her farther's residence in King William county, in the 13th year of her age, Virginia Page Croxton, the oldest daughter of Dr. William V. Croxton, and grand-daughter of Bro. William Gary.

Page was a lovely child, possessing many noble traits of character. She was so gentle in her manners, and so sweet in her disposition, that it was only to know her to love her. She had a great ear for music, and for one of her age could not be excelled as a performer on the piano. She had not connected herself with the Church, but, being so childish in all her ways, and having been so well-trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, I believe that she has gone to a better country, where she will meet that mother who died so triumphantly years ago. Her death was very unexpected to her relatives and friends, and truly, I may say, a heavy affliction. May God's grace sustain them in their sad bereavement. W.
